VOL. XI. RENO, WASHOE COUNTY, NEVADA, SATURDAY AUGUST 27, 1881. NO. 127

The Kind of a Fellow He Was.

Steubenville Herald.

A very high-toned looking young man, in exquisite moustache, loud plaid clothes, red necktie, low-crowned hat, straw-colored kids, and knitting-needle cane, walked into a tobacco shop, and, throwing down a half dollar on the counter, said: "Well this is the worst town I ever saw; a gentleman can't get anything in it satisfactory, and I am utterly unable to see how a person of fastidious taste can live here. I say, Mr. Shopkeeper, can you sell a fellow a decent cigar."

"Yes, sir," said the cigar man, meekly.

"Well then, fly around lively and do it. Don't you see that half-dollar?"

"Yes sir. What kind of a cigar do you wish, sir?"

"What kind?"

"Yes sir."

"Why, look at me, sir, a moment, and see for yourself what kind of a cigar would suit me," and he drew himself up grandly and gazed down on the shop-keeper.

The shop-keeper looked and then took in the half-dollar, got out a cigar, handed it to the man with forty-nine cents change, and said: "I owe you half a cent, sir, but I can't make change unless you take another cigar."

The nice young man looked at the shopkeeper and then at the cigar, and then at himself, and, without a single word, walked out of the shop.

Highest Lake in the World.

The lake that has the highest elevation of any in the world is Green Lake, in Colorado. Its surface is 10,252 feet above the level of the sea. Pine forests surround it, and eternal snows deck the neighboring mountain tops. One of these, Gray's Peak, has an altitude of 14,341 feet. The water of Green Lake is as clear as crystal, and large rock masses and a petrified forest are distinctly visible at the bottom. The branches of the trees are of dazzling whiteness, as though cut in marble. Salmon and trout swim among them. In place the lake is two hundred feet deep.

Great Bargain.

I offer for sale one of the finest stock ranches in the State, known as the Fish Spring Ranch, the best station on the Reno and Surprise road, 49 miles north of Reno, containing 400 acres deeded land, 300 acres under fence, with all necessary cross fences. Wicked for Clergymen.

"I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimony to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article, made of valuable remedies known to all, that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them." Rev.——, Washington, D. C.

STILL ALIVE BUT SINKING.

As we go to press at four o'clock the President is still alive, but that is about all. The doctors have given up all hope, and think he is dying now from the symptoms.

NEVADA'S INSANE ASYLUM.

To-day the corner stone of an Insane Asylum for Nevada was laid with appropriate ceremonies. We are glad to be able to chronicle the fact, and to hope that the day is not far distant when our insane may be kept at home. There has been considerable delay in the commencement of this much needed institution, owing to the fact that the law was very loosely drawn, and with little or no regard to the facts or legal possibilities of the case. We hope now, however, too see the building which has been commenced soon completed according to the plans and specifications. Humanity has demanded that the State incur this expense, and the ghoul-like opposition of our California friend has brought about the determination that the Asylum shall be built.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"A Pick Swinger" writes under that transparent nom de plume to the Appeal and says, with the curt frankness of a hypothetical miner: "The managers of the Sierra Nevada don't want to find any ore just yet. I can show good ore with a dozen strokes of the pick. The miners know more than they dare tell."

The Washoe and Ormsby papers are beginning to agitate the question concerning the District Judges who are to succeed the present incumbent.

That matter will present itself with others in the "near future."—Carson Index.

Is there any blood in the political atmosphere?

We have been requested by so many to publish Mr. Redding's article on nitre in full, that with his permission, we give it to-day. We need not apologize for anything so full of important information to Nevada people.

The Vicksburg Herald says: "We feel sure another Presidential election will never be fought on sectional lines. Parties will divide on the interest and opinions of those who build them up."

It is pleasant to see our eastern exchanges filling up with good matter. Frank Leslies Weekly publishes the GAZETTE's article on the great forty mile desert.

The Pleasures of Wealth.

SUMMER RANCH, Aug. 26.

ED. GAZETTE:—All your readers doubtless want to spend their summers in the mountains, but they cannot all be spared, so I write to share the luxury with those who stay at home. We reached this place after a long, hot drive, over a dusty road, full of rock rolled in by bands of sheep, of which the mountains are full. The Summer House is a station on the road where teamsters and travellers stop for meals, etc. It is built on the upper side of the dusty road below which lies a pocket edition of a meadow. The house is small and poor. It is weather-stained and patched. The cooking is good, and the beef and mutton very fine. We got here very tired, and went to bed in "the loft" very early. My head came in contact with a string of "yarbs" of the tertiary period, and they sent down a cloud of dust. In the effort to recover, my leg found a stove-pipe hole and went through. It must have looked funny to the people below, for they all laughed. This morning when we got up the landlady told us that we would find a spring right down there where we could wash our faces. We walked a third of a mile and dipped in, and then found we had no towel, and had to wipe on the linen of our caps. We don't want to hurt the hotels, but you better tell the boys to bring along some matches and a tin cup and camp out. We are going out for a hunt to-day, and will send you some game if this letter don't take your appetite, YOURS FOR REFORM.

NITRE IN NEVADA.

HOW NITRE IS GENERATED—DEPOSITS IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

Hon. B. B. Redding's Paper as Read Before the Academy of Sciences.

A few weeks since it was stated in the public press that nitrate of soda had been discovered in the Humboldt desert in Nevada. I therefore wrote to Mr. Walter Schmidt of White Plains, who, it was announced, had made the discovery, for more definite information. He informed me that he had found nitrate of soda near his salt works some years since, and had taken samples of the earth and rock in which it was found to Philadelphia for analysis; that the analysis proved satisfactory as to percentage of nitrates, and he also thought chemical works might be established with profit for separating the nitrate of soda from the earthy material with which it was associated.

Mr. Schmidt also forwarded a number of samples of rock and earth gathered in different places in the hills and on the deserts. These I caused to be analyzed. Some contained fifteen, some twenty and one sample thirty-five per cent. of nitrate of soda. A majority of the samples, however, were common salt with only traces of nitrate of soda. In the samples containing nitrate of soda a very large percentage consisted of chloride of sodium. A careful reading of all the obtainable literature relating to the climate, geological formation and salt fields, of the desert of Tarapaca in Peru, whereon are found the deposits of nitrate of soda which now furnish the principle supplies of the manufactories of the world, satisfied me that the natural conditions of these desert regions are not unlike. As analyses showed the soil taken from widely separated places on the Humboldt desert to contain from ten to twenty-five per cent. nitrate of soda, it seemed probable that by further exploration extensive beds of earth and gravel, cemented into masses of salt and nitrate of soda, (called caleche by the Peruvians), might be found

SUFFICIENTLY RICH IN NITRATES

To create an extensive business and make the United States, in this valuable material, independent of Peru and Chili. When it is remembered that nitrate of potash or nitrate of soda are used either directly or indirectly in the manufacture of gunpowder, dynamite, nitro glycerine, as well as a great many other explosives, and nitric acid, it will be readily seen how large a part nitre performs in the commerce and manufacture of civilized nations. To illustrate our present dependence on other nations for nitrates, the records of the Treasury Department show that there were imported into the United States for the year ending June 30, 1879, seventy-six million two hundred and eighty-five thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight pounds (76,285,798) of nitrate of soda, valued at the Custom House at $1,348,572. There was also imported the same year of nitrate of potash, crude and refined, nine million four hundred and sixty-three thousand three hundred and eighty-eight (9,463,388) pounds, which paid a duty of $89,977 89.

To show the increasing dependence of the manufactures of the Pacific Coast on nitrates brought from foreign countries it is only necessary to state that for the year ending June 30, 1879, there were imported into San Francisco ten million three hundred and eighty-eight thousand five hundred and eighty-nine (10,388,589) pounds of nitrate of soda, valued at $191,278, and two hundred and fifty-eight thousand two hundred and fifty-three (258,253) pounds of nitrate of potash, valued at $11,077, while for the past year, ending June 30, 1881, the importation into the port had increased to fourteen million seven hundred and eighty-three thousand two hundred and twenty-six (14,783,226) pounds of nitrate of soda, valued at $326,494, and four hundred and sixty-eight thousand two hundred and fifty-seven (468,257) pounds of nitrate of potash, valued at $18,358. Or, to state the facts in a more condensed form, in two years the consumption of nitrate of soda on the Pacific Coast had increased nearly one-third, and of nitrate of potash nearly one-half.

THE GREAT SOURCE OF SUPPLY

Of nitrate of soda is from a desert in the province of Tarapaca in Peru. This desert, about seventy-five miles in length, lies north and south of latitude 20 S, at an elevation of from 3,000 to 4,000 feet, and commences at about forty-five miles from the ocean. The nitrate of soda is found in greater or less quantities over an area of several hundred square miles of this desert. It rarely rains in this region and this part of the country is nearly destitute of water near the surface. In addition to nitrate of soda the earth of this desert contains chloride of sodium, borates of lime and soda, sulphates of lime and soda, and magnesia. Alumina and iodine always exist with the nitrate of soda. The most extensive works on the desert are at the Pampa or Taramagal. The plain is supposed to have been at one time a sea lake. Its western border for a width of 2,000 feet is covered with salt. Still further west and adjoining the salt deposit is found the caleche or rough nitrate. The remains of many other lakes are also found on the desert with similar characteristics and with beds of nitrate of soda in similar positions. Mr. J. F. Flagg, a civil engineer, had charge of one of the most extensive works at Taramagal for extracting nitrate of soda, and appears to have studied the climate and geological formation of that part of Peru with much care and attention. A paper from him on the subject was read before the American Institute and published in the American Chemist in 1874. From the writings of Mr. Flagg and other travelers I learn that the caleche or rough nitrate is found beneath the surface at the places as I have stated, generally in insulated masses. Sometimes it is found at a short distance beneath the surface, covered only by a few inches of sand, frequently at a greater depth and covered by a cap of hard earth and sand indurated with salt. The thickness of the nitrate is from one to ten feet, but does not average more than three feet. Beneath the nitrate is a bed of soft sand containing an abundance of crystals of glauberite and small quantities of borates of lime and soda.

THE CALECHE

Or earthy matter containing nitrate of soda varies in quality from nearly pure common salt containing traces of nitrate up to fifty and occasionally sixty per cent. of nitrate of soda. The miner makes an excavation where he expects to find the nitrate, and, if successful, tunnels into the caleche and fills the hole with coarse gunpowder made on the spot, regulating the charge to the amount of earth he proposes to loosen. After the mass has been loosened and broken by the explosion it is assorted and all of the caleche supposed to contain over ten per cent. is conveyed to the works, where the salt and other materials are separated from the nitrate. The average cost of production at the works in Taramagal in 1874, including all expenses of mining, assorting, separating and preparing for the market, was estimated at 1¼ cents per pound.

Thus far nitrate of soda has been found on the Humboldt desert, in the State of Nevada, at different points on the southeast side of the Sink of the Humboldt for a distance of twenty-five miles. The centre of the region would be approximately opposite Brown's Station on the Central Pacific railroad, latitude forty north, longitude 118.35 west, elevation 3,925 feet. This region, from the description, resembles the desert of Tarapaca in Peru. Its immense beds of salt indicate that it was at one time below the ocean. In it are found also the borates and sulphates of lime and soda, magnesia and alumina. It is also practically a rainless region. A record of eight years shows that it receives an average annual rainfall of but 4.16 inches. Its average summer temperature is 78° 8' Fahr. The discovery of nitrate of soda in this region of Nevada, where the condition of climate and geological formation so nearly resemble those of the deserts of Peru, seemed to be of such promising commercial importance that in company with our fellow member, Mr. J. R. Scupham, and other gentlemen, I visited it a few weeks since for the purpose of learning the extent of these deposits. We were met at the station by Mr. Walter Schmidt, who stated that he had found it at different places in the desert and also in the hills. With him we visited the hills and found the nitrate of soda as he had described it. On the southeastern side of the Sink of the Humboldt is a range of trachyte mountains having an elevation above the water of the lake of about 1,200 feet. The general trend of these mountains for about twenty-five miles is northeast and southwest. The particular range does not appear to be named, other than it is called a part of the west Humboldt range. A hill at the southwestern extremity of the range is of a marked red color and is called Nitre Hill. On the south side of the hill, about four hundred feet above the lake, we were shown the nitrate of soda in its matrix, if I may so describe it. At this place the trachyte is much broken into irregular seams, and readily splits off into conchoidal flakes.

IN THESE SEAMS

and between these flakes the spaces are filled with nitrate of soda united with chloride of sodium. These seams, where we examined them, were from one eighth to half an inch wide. Several analyses showed from twenty to thirty per cent. of nitrate of soda, the remainder consisting principally of common salt. Appearances seemed to show that the nitre and salt, from whatever source derived, formed on each surface in the seams, and grew by accretion in crystalline form until the seam was filled. This was shown by the fact that in many cases where the distances between the two surfaces of the rock were wider than usual a vacant place was left in the center of the nitrate. Mr. Schmidt stated that his observation had shown him that wherever these crevices were exposed to the light rains of winter, the nitrate and salt were dissolved, but that the crevice was always filled up with the same material during the hot, dry weather of the next summer. I learn by letters that since we were at Nitre Hill further explorations show that the nitrate of soda in the same condition, is found throughout this range of mountains. Nitrate of soda has also been found by Mr. Schmidt and by Mr. George Lovelocks in the desert at distances more than twenty miles apart, a few feet below the surface, mixed with earth and gravel in the form of caleche, and so far as I am capable of determining identical with the caleche found in Peru excepting none has yet been found yielding so great a percentage of nitre. I present to the Academy samples of the trachyte rock, on which the nitrate of soda forms, also a specimen of the crystallized nitrate found in the seams, and of the caleche, dug up in the desert, five miles from Nitre Hill.

Before giving any theory of my own as to the places where miners should search for nitrate of soda, with the hope of finding it in quality and quantity that would pay for working in competition to the cheap labor of Peru, it is but proper that I should state all I have been able to learn as to the manner in which nitre is formed. Henry Wurtz says: "The nitrate is found in nature; its only sources are engendered by processes which so far from being imitated by man, are not clearly understood and remain still in the present state of chemical science, subjects of investigation and of controversy. No practical mode of obtaining nitric acid from its elements, which are literally free as air, has as yet been discovered or is it even hinted at up to the present time."

Dana says: "Nitre requires for its formation dry air and long periods without rain."

Boussingault announced that his experiments "had demonstrated that organic matters are indispensable to nitrification."

Schloessenger and Muntz three years since published the facts that their researches in nitrification "had resulted in the very important discovery of a nitrifying organism analogous to the ferment organism of yeast." In their experiments "they found that nitrification, however active, is immediately stopped when chloroform is introduced, the effect being the same as when it comes in contact with yeast. They also found that nitrification after having been thus stopped for several weeks, the addition of a small quantity of a nitrifying body will start the process again. They also found that the temperature of boiling water is sufficient to destroy all powers of nitrification, and that soil that has once been heated to that point produces, in air free from germs, carbonic acid and ammonia, but no nitrates. If, however, the soil is moistened with water containing a little untreated soil the production of nitric acid again commences.

HENCE THEIR CONCLUSION

Was that nitrates in soils owe their origin to oxidation brought about by living organisms."

Mr. J. F. Flagg, from whom I have quoted, after giving a careful description of the nitrate of sodium deposits in the desert of Taramagal in Peru, adopts and endorses the theory of David Forbes Esq., published in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society of 1861. Mr. Flagg believes the salts in general found at or near the surface to have been produced by the evaporation of the numerous lagoons left by the subsidence of the sea, the quantity of the salts in proportion to the bulk of water left by any one lagoon being accounted for by the occasional replenishing of the water from the sea for a longer or shorter period (as first by the recurrence of every tide and afterwards by higher tides than ordinary) through breaks or lateral openings nearest the then coast. He then quotes from Mr. Forbes, who says: "All the data that I could obtain appeared to fully confirm the lagoon hypothesis previously mentioned, and to prove that the original constituents of these beds had been merely such salts as would result from the evaporation of sea water. The nitrate of soda and some other associated compounds, are due to subsequent reactions and consequent decompositions of the salt of the original deposit mainly produced by the agency of carbonate of lime and decomposing vegetable matter. The first step in the formation of nitrate of soda appears to be the decomposition of the chloride of sodium or salt by carbonate of lime (in the form of shell, sand etc.) with the production of chloride of calcium and carbonate of soda, both of which salts have been shown to be present in quantity in the soils of these nitrate grounds. The carbonate of soda thus eliminated, when in contact with the mixture of shell, sand and decomposing vegetable matter, which may be expected to result from the luxuriant vegetation around such a tropical swamp, and from the abundant marine plants in the lagoon itself, would realise the condition of the French artificial nitre beds, substituting only carbonate of soda for the carbonate of potash there used. We may consequently, with a fairness, expect a similar result in the production of nitrate of soda on a still larger scale."

Not being a chemist I am not competent to pass upon these theories. From my observations at Nitrete Hill, where we found the nitrate of soda filling the seams and crevices of the trachyte, it is clear that it has there formed since the trachyte was broken into seams and fissures. If decayed organic matter is necessary for its formation from its constituents in the atmosphere this organic matter may have come from the annually decaying vegetation in the soil that covers these mountains, or from the lichens and fungoid growths on the surface of the rock in these fissures. If, as Mr. Schmidt states from his observation, the nitre where exposed to the winter rains is washed out but renewed again during the long dry season of the following year, it would show that under favoring conditions

ITS FORMATION IS COMPARATIVELY RAPID.

None of the water courses of this region reach the ocean; all evaporate in the so-called sinks. The light winter rains that dissolve the nitrate must carry it in solution down to the desert, where the water is evaporated. At certain places in the gravel beneath the sand the water will come in contact with decayed shells, which are found beneath the surface in nearly all parts of the desert, and also the decayed vegetable matter from plants that once grew on the spot, as well as from decayed vegetable matter annually brought down by the Humboldt river. Here the process of formation may be renewed. Thus far the largest bodies of the caleche have been found beneath the surface in the desert, and it is probable that if ever found in sufficient quantity and in sufficently large percentage to pay for working, the profitable deposits will be found on the deserts adjoining the salt deposits. The slight explorations that have thus far been made convinced me that in the event of war or a large advance in the present prices of nitre, sufficient can be found in the Humboldt desert to supply all demand in the United States for many years. To compete with the established works and cheap labor of Peru and Chili, deposits of caleche, containing a large percentage of nitrate will have to be discovered at points where there are cheap facilities of transportation and where cheap fuel and a supply of fresh water can be easily obtained. It is reported that nitrate of soda has also been found near the sink of the Carson river. Nitrate of soda and nitrate of potash have been forwarded to me from a point described as 'about sixty miles south of Salt Lake in Utah." In this connection it may be interesting to state that the first reference to the existence of nitrates in the desert regions of North America is found in an original manuscript in the city of Mexico of the narrative of Padre Escalanti, who made an expedition from that city as far north as Salt Lake, in 1776. Simpson in his "Exploration of Utah in 1859," made the following translation from Padre Escalanti's narrative: "To the south and southwest of Lake Timpanogo (Utah Lake) there are two wide valleys, full of pasture, and with plenty of water. To one of them reaches the lake, and next to the latter there is a large piece of the valley strongly impregnated with saltpeter." If the theories of the scientific gentleman, whom I have quoted, are correct we may expect to learn of further discoveries of nitrate of soda in several other of the Utah and Nevada deserts, in Arizona, and possibly in the Colorado desert in the southeastern part of California.

Items Picked up by a "Gazette" Reporter on a Flying Trip.

The road at the head of the Highland ditch is very bad.

J. P. Foulkes is rebuilding his house at Essex.

Merrill has improved the sand grade near Verdi very much.

Crystal Peak is still going down. The brewery and blacksmith shops are both closed.

Sardine valley had grasshoppers this year for the fourth year. The ground is bare of feed and the dairy cows have to be driven away for feed. They have all disappeared now. The butter crop will be about 1200 pounds short.

Fleckenstein says deer are plentier than they have been for fifteen years in the country between Sierra valley and the railroad.

Sheep are driving the grouse out of the country. They destroy the nests and ruin the eggs. Where the birds used to be thick, they can scarcely be seen at all now.

Jack Campbell has sold his Hot Springs ranch, at Sierraville, to G. T. Jones, O. T. Jones and W. E. Williams. O. T. Jones used to brake for Clinch on the passenger train. The firm is Jones & Co. The house is crowded, and they propose to improve and enlarge for next summer.

Some sheep men found four cinnamon bear up a tree, two and one-half miles north of Webber Lake. They went to the lake greatly excited, and everybody turned out last Sunday morning to hunt them. The biggest weighed about 400 pounds, and was thirty feet from the ground. It was shot twice before it fell, and the dogs sprang on it and were cleaned out. Ike Wiley put his gun to its head and shot it dead. The small ones were quickly dispatched.

Mr. Dean's broken leg is getting better. He keeps the Globe, at Sierraville.

The dairymen complain that their cows get into the creeks and eat young willows at this time of the year. It makes their milk taste bitter, but, strange to say, does not effect the butter in the least.

C. W. Chapman is again in his own hotel, the Sierraville House, where he is gaining a good circle of business friends. It is a temperance house.

G. Q. Buxton is running the Truckee, Sierraville and Eureka mine stage line, in addition to his hotel at Randolph. C. C. Darling still runs the branch to Loyalton. He also has a large stable and wagon and blacksmith shop at Sierraville.

Loyalton travel now goes in via Sierraville and down the valley. No stages run by Sardine at all.

A. K. Lamb is in Chico.

D. D. Newman is training Overland Pat and Nevada for the Reno Fair.

Henry P. Brown, formerly with Henry Ruhe and Geo. Schaffer, is butchering at Sierraville.

Grizzly Davis says Club-Foot has been dead at least four years. He says he has no idea how old he was. He saw his track in 1858, and it was as big then as it was in 1876, when he saw it last. Some men killed a big bear in Grizzly valley, with a lame foot, and he thinks it was old Club-Foot Brin. That was four or five years ago.

Fletcher's saw mill will not be rebuilt. The boys put in a Huntington shingle mill, and will soon be turning out goods.

The Plumas-Eureka mines absorb all the hay, grain, butter and vegetables of Mohawk and American valleys, and draws on Sierra valley for considerable besides. All the beef cattle come from the North. The farmers are not very enthusiastic for a railroad, because now their prices are graded by the prices in Sierra valley, with the freight added. They think that a railroad would bring them into competion with Reno, if not California hay.

McNair's mills, near Rocky Point, Sierra county, are getting out lumber for the Asylum. They get a good deal of sugar pine that is very fine. It is hauled about fifty-five miles.

W. C. Bringham is keeping the Beckwourth hotel.

Houghton has sold out his butcher business in Loyalton to J. F. Turner, and will devote his time to his Jamison business.

The mountain hotels are full, and people are sleeping on the bed lounge every night.

J. D. Kelly is almost the only one in the vicinity of Loyalton that has suffered from grasshoppers this year. He has 210 acres of barley and oats, and two-thirds of it has been destroyed. Half of it lies on the ground. Mr. Raines suffered some loss, and Duncan and others on the west side, lost all their crop.

FINE SCENERY.

The Grand Rides Within Reach of Reno People.

A fine mountain ride of six miles is from Sierraville to Sierra City. The road crosses the head of the valley, and at Senator Turner's strikes up a five-mile rise, through a magnificent body of timber. The lower hills are covered with fine yellow pines, many of them models of native grace. They rise tall and straight, with smooth, clean bark and very thick and strong. At the heigth of 1,000 feet above the valley, the sugar pine and fir begin. There is a very abundant growth of sugar pine. The summit is 1,700 feet above the valley. On the western slope the timber is in strips on the north slopes and along the streams. Great bare or bush-covered mountains stick out of the earth, and the timber is of a poor quality of fir and yellow pine. The stretch of fourteen miles from Fowle's to Bassett's is without a house. Mrs. Bassett's is five miles from Sierra City, so she is not in a crowded neighborhood. She has a station on the road and sets a good table. A new house will be built next summer. There are some good prospects in the neighborhood. George Cutting has a claim a mile or so up the road that is a placer and quartz mine combined. The face of the rock is covered with gravel that he is going to sluice off, and thinks he can make it pay. That will leave the ledge bare, and it is good rock. Gold Lake is over the hill from Bassett's. It is in the midst of a cluster of lakes, Salmon, full of nice large trout, but no salmon; Sardine Lakes, Packer Lake, Deer Lake, etc. Gold Lake set everybody crazy in 1850. Some lunatic named Stoddard, said the shores were full of gold, and he got up a grand rush that lasted one summer. The prospectors found gold on Feather river, and since that quartz mines have been found near Gold Lake.

A MOUNTAIN TOWN.

One of the Original Gold-Digging Headquarters.

Sierra City is small but compact. It has three stores, three hotels and twenty-three saloons. It nestles at the south foot of the Sierra Buttes, on the banks of the Yuba, which is here as clear and bright as the Truckee. Its water has the greenish cast of Tahoe. The town is 4,550 feet high, and the Butte is 4650 feet higher. The Sierra Butte mine lies on the west flank of the Butte, and has an imposing array of mills, buildings and offices. The ore works about $7 50 to the ton, and enough escapes to keep a string of arastras running nearly to the town. The mine is worked by tunnels, three in number, and the three mills stand at the mouths. They have ninety stamps. About 300 men employed, and the pay roll makes $18,000 a month, which accounts for the twenty-three saloons. There has never been a bill unpaid or a man asked to wait for a dollar that was due him, a thing that can be said of few mines in California. It is owned by the same company that owns the Plumas-Eureka. The mills run by water. A new tunnel and mill are under way. Sierra City has A. O. U. Ws., Masons and Odd Fellows.

Well, perhaps, you had better stay, then."

An O'er True Tale.

A neighboring county has a story of real life that illustrates the dangers that surround poor, struggling humanity. One of its most eminent citizens has a grown-up son who might be called Charlie, for short, who loves the ladies, and is called a marrying man. Charlie recently got acquainted with a nice young lady, thirty-five or forty miles away from his home, and called on her several times, when his father asked him as a favor to drop the acquaintance. He, boy like, became all the more attentive, until he awoke his father's anger, and was repeatedly forbidden to go to see the girl at all. He thought he was the victim of a stern parent, and stood on his dignity, swearing eternal fidelity, etc. He asked for a reason time and again, saying the lady was perfect and irreproachable, to all of which his father agreed, but finally he broke out and said: "Well, Charlie, if I must tell you; that girl is a half-sister of yours!" Charlie was thunderstruck, but rallied enough to say: "Well, I wish you would give me a list of your children."

Growth of Methodism.

N. Y. Sun.

The Growth of the Methodists as a sect has probably been without precedent in raididity. Their first "preaching house" dates from 1739, at Bristol England. But before that an unused foundry in London was so used. The workship in Methodist chapels in England to-day is divided into that of the Liturgical and non-Liturgical. Wesleyanism combines both, and in many Wesleyan chapels the service differs but little from that of the Episcopal Church. A writer of authority says: "With strong confidence in the accuracy of our statements, we compute the adherents of Methodism, at five millions in connection with the Bristol conferences, and fourteen million with the American. The ecclesiastical property of the connection in Great Britain may be calculated at eleven millions, and in America at eighteen sterling. It is in Great Britain almost exclusively preferred by the lower middle class—the well-to-do mechanic and tradesman, and the manufacturer, but not the rich son of the manufacturer; for, as Mrs. Baurbauld pertinently remarked, in the case of the wealthy, the carriages of the second generation convey them to the parish church."
